Preface	i
Introduction	iii
Chapter 1. Solicitations
1 You failed to read the entire solicitation, including any clauses incorporated by reference.	2
<hr/>
2 You failed to read, consider, and acknowledge all of the subsequent amendments to the solicitation.	3
<hr/>
3 You failed to ask about a patent ambiguity in the solicitation.	3
<hr/>
4 You relied on the verbal representations of a government official rather than on the written solicitation.	4
5 You failed to request a post-award debriefing in a negotiated procurement.	5
Chapter 2. Proposal Preparation and Submission
6 You failed to use the Freedom of Information Act to your benefit before formulating and submitting an offer.	8
<hr/>
7 You failed to follow the solicitation's submission instructions.	8
<hr/>
8 You failed to base your offer on the evaluation factors.	9
<hr/>
9 You failed to submit your offer on time.	10
<hr/>
10 You submitted a nonconforming bid or noncompliant proposal.	10
<hr/>
11 Your proposal contained a material misrepresentation.	11

12	In a small business set-aside, you submitted a proposal that on its face violates the limitations on subcontracting.	12
13	In a negotiated procurement, you mistakenly expected that the government would hold discussions and provide you with the opportunity to submit a final proposal revision.	13
14	You incorporated a mistake into your bid but failed to assert it.	13
15	You failed to understand the legal differences between an RFQ and an IFB or an RFP, the difference between a quote and a bid or proposal, and how a unilateral offer will lapse.	16
16	You failed to appreciate the importance of past performance in future solicitations.	17

Chapter 3. Defective Pricing and the Truth in Negotiations Act

17	You failed to understand what cost or pricing data encompass.	22
18	You failed to assert that the contracting officer had no right to obtain your cost or pricing data.	23
19	You failed to provide accurate, current, and complete cost or pricing data to the government.	24

Chapter 4. Protests

20	You submitted a protest that did not contain all the required elements, particularly a statement of how you were prejudiced by the improper agency action.	28
21	You selected the wrong forum for your bid protest (the procuring agency, the Government Accountability Office, or the Court of Federal Claims).	28
22	You failed to prosecute your protest vigorously.	31
23	You failed to consider the implications of a bid protest on your future relationship with a particular contracting office or contracting officer.	32

Chapter 5. Contract Types

24	You abused the micropurchase or simplified acquisition programs by breaking down requirements to evade the relevant thresholds (or you agreed with government contracting officials to engage in these abuses).	36
25	You did not request the use of the test program for commercial items.	36
26	You did not understand economic price adjustment factors in fixed-price, economic price adjustment contracts.	37
27	You did not understand the rights that a contractor has in a cost-plus-incentive-fee contract.	38
28	You failed to understand the award fee formula and evaluation criteria in your cost-plus-award-fee contract.	39
29	You failed to understand the government's incredible range of options in requirements and indefinite delivery/indefinite quantity contracts.	40

Chapter 6. Multiple Award Schedule Contracts

30	You failed to give most-favored-customer pricing to the government throughout the entire life of the contract.	44
31	You failed to fully and properly disclose your commercial sales practices on the GSA Commercial Sales Practice Form.	44
32	You failed to carefully establish the category of customer that will be used in connection with your MAS contract's price reductions clause.	45

Chapter 7. Subcontract Management

33	You failed to flow down your FAR clauses to your subcontractors and suppliers, particularly the termination for convenience and changes clauses.	48
34	You failed to prepare a satisfactory small business subcontracting plan, if required.	49
35	You failed to include a specially tailored disputes clause in your subcontract, including a statement that the subcontractor must continue to perform as directed by the prime contractor during the pendency of any dispute.	51

Chapter 8. Contract Administration

36	You accepted direction from an unauthorized official regarding your obligations under a contract.	54
37	You failed to read your entire contract, including all of the amendments and clauses incorporated by reference.	55
38	You followed oral promises and direction instead of what was in the written contract.	55
39	You failed to comply with the quality control/quality assurance requirements in your contract.	56
40	You failed to deliver on time as required by the delivery schedule.	56
41	You failed to submit a proper invoice.	57
42	You failed to follow up on nonpayment of proper invoices.	58
43	You volunteered to perform extra work with the expectation that you would be compensated later.	59
44	When your labor costs increased as the result of a new wage determination or collective bargaining agreement, or as the result of continued compliance with a pre-existing wage determination or collective bargaining agreement, you failed to claim a price adjustment pursuant to the Service Contract Act.	59
45	You failed to realize that you have no right to receive an option.	60
46	You failed to realize that the government has a unilateral right to extend a contract for services for up to six months.	60
47	You continued to work on a multi-year contract after the end of the current year on the promise that the option year would be exercised, even though it had not been formally exercised by the government.	61
48	You failed to demand that the government exercise any option in strict accord with the terms of that option.	62
49	On the promise of award, you started to work and incurred costs before your contract was actually signed.	62

50	You failed to pay the minimum wages or benefits required by the wage determination in your contract.	63
51	You requested a revision to the delivery schedule for reasons other than government delay or fault, but you failed to offer consideration (generally a price reduction).	64
52	You failed to appreciate the extent of the government's rights in data or software.	64
53	You failed to assert your right to an equitable adjustment in a timely manner.	65
54	You failed to realize that you have a duty to continue contract performance, despite a burdensome change order.	66
55	You failed to appreciate the difference between anticipatory repudiation and negotiation.	66
56	You failed to comply with the limitation of cost or limitation of funds clause in your contract.	68
57	You improperly reported on the source of your components or violated the Buy American Act or Trade Agreements Act in the performance of your contract.	69
58	You failed to maintain your present responsibility.	70
59	Your actions resulted in suspension or debarment.	70
60	You failed to contest an irrational debarment or suspension.	71
61	You failed to recognize that both the contractor and the government have a duty to cooperate in the execution of the contract.	73
62	You failed to identify and submit a claim for a constructive change.	74
63	You failed to identify and submit a claim for defective specifications.	74
64	You failed to recognize and claim impossibility of performance.	75
65	You failed to assert your right to an excusable delay.	76

66	You failed to realize that the government may inspect at any reasonable place and time.	77
67	You failed to take appropriate action to prevent a termination for default after the government properly rejected your tendered goods.	78
68	You failed to realize that the government can accept goods that are useable but that do not pass inspection if you can reach an agreement on a price reduction.	79
69	You failed to assert a prior course of dealing that made otherwise unacceptable goods acceptable.	80
70	You failed to set up a records management system that complies with FAR Part 4, and that provides for the appropriate destruction of records when they reach the end of their regulatory service life.	80

Chapter 9. Contract Pricing and Costs

71	You failed to demonstrate to an auditor or cost and price analyst that the price in your offer was reasonable.	86
72	Your proposal or invoices included unallowable costs.	86

Chapter 10. Government Furnished Property

73	You failed to maintain a proper inventory of government furnished property.	90
74	You failed to request an equitable adjustment when the government did not meet its obligations with respect to government furnished property.	90

Chapter 11. Contract Termination

75	You failed to properly respond to a cure notice or show-cause notice.	92
76	You failed to challenge an improper termination for default.	93
77	You endangered the performance of your contract.	95

78	You failed to assert that the government waived the delivery schedule when it sought to default you after substantial time had passed for delivery or performance.	96
79	Upon receipt of a valid default, you failed to contest the government's unreasonable excess cost of reprourement.	97
80	You failed to request a no-cost termination in lieu of a default termination.	97
81	You failed either to submit your termination for convenience settlement proposal within the one-year deadline, or to obtain a written extension from the contracting officer.	98
82	In a termination for convenience settlement, you (or the auditor) rigidly applied the cost principles of FAR Part 31 instead of seeking a reasonable and fair settlement.	99
83	You failed to assert that any liquidated damages assessed against you bore no relation to the actual government costs (i.e., were punitive) and therefore, were invalid.	100

Chapter 12. Audits

84	You failed to insist that auditors provide you with a specific request in writing from a contracting officer before providing access to your records.	104
85	You failed to insist that auditors provide you with a letter or entrance briefing explicitly stating the scope of the audit.	104
86	You failed to appoint a single point of contact with the auditors through which all requests, documents, copies, and communication would pass, and who would be present at all employee interviews.	105
87	You allowed the auditors access to your employees other than for floor checks of timecards.	105
88	You failed to insist that the auditors provide you with an exit briefing stating their findings.	106
89	You failed to fully cooperate with an audit to the extent required by regulation.	107

Chapter 13. Integrity and Investigations

90	You failed to have a company compliance program in place—including a training program—outlining the company’s procedures in the event of a criminal investigation.	110
91	You failed to appreciate the consequences of civil and criminal misconduct.	111
92	You failed to inform your employees of their rights and obligations during an investigation.	112
93	You failed to inform your employees that all company documents belong to the company.	112
94	You ignored a conflict of interest.	113

Chapter 14. Contract Disputes

95	You failed to include a sum certain in your claim.	116
96	You failed to request an equitable adjustment when warranted.	116
97	After you realized your equitable adjustment would not be honored by the contracting officer, you failed to submit a proper claim.	117
98	When the contracting officer failed to issue a final decision on your claim within 60 days of its submission (or failed to schedule a date certain for issuance of a final decision), you failed to deem your claim denied and to immediately appeal to a board of contract appeals or the U.S. Court of Federal Claims.	118
99	You selected the wrong forum for your appeal.	119

Chapter 15. Performance Quality

100	You failed to perform as a world-class contractor.	122
